

Prehospital care is rarely taught in medical schools, yet doctors and medical students may be called upon to help out. England and Argentina join forces to write a new series outlining the key principles.

A knowledge of first aid might have come in useful for Bala Karunakaran, who helped out at a hospital in Sri Lanka when the tsunami hit. He gives an account of his experience.

Lastly, if you fancy trying your hand at editing the studentBMJ, check out the advert—it could be you.

Deborah Cohen, Student Editor

64

JobScore

Don't know what your future holds? Check out JobScore to find out what's suited to you

72

Media spotlight

We get tips from the MDU about how to cope with the glare of the media spotlight

46 editorials bmjlearning.com • A guide for electives

48 news Mosul suicide bomber was a medical student • Rich nations should pay more to developing countries • Generosity after tsunami could threaten neglected crises • Medics worldwide: news and opportunities from the IFMSA • Rejecting political correctness

51 education Family history of breast cancer • Beginner's guide to genetics: Cancer genetics • First aid: Prehospital care • Clinical case series • Dioxin poisoning • A bad leg

61 careers International education • Understanding personality type: Judging and perceiving • Rating jobs with JobScore • Life and loathes of a new doctor • The advice zone

68 paper+ Suicide in patients with schizophrenia: nested case control study

70 life The eye of the storm • How would you cope in the media spotlight? • Rethinking your elective • Hajj: journey of a lifetime • A field guide to experts • Rat race

84 letters

85 reviews Art • Websites • Media • Viewpoint • eyespy

Front cover: Dermot Tatlow/Panos

62

Personality

How do you like to live your life? Do you keep an organised diary or fly by the seat of your pants—find out

56

Clinical skills

Ian Bickle gives his regular update about how to get through clinical exams